The College

Established in 1899 by the Twentieth Territorial Legislature as Northern Arizona Normal School, Arizona State College has made rapid growth and improvement from a one-building normal school to a modern, multi-building, 270-acre campus noted for its beautifully landscaped campus.

By action of the Board of Regents of the Universities and State College, and the Arizona Legislature, Arizona State College was awarded university status and will become Northern Arizona University on May 1, 1966.

The university academic areas include College of Arts and Science, College of Education, College of Business Administration, College of Creative Arts, School of Forestry, and School of Applied Science and Technology.

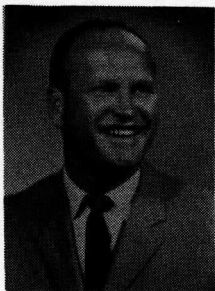

This institution is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and by the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education.

It is authorized by the Board of Regents to grant the following degrees: Associate of Science, Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Science in Education, Bachelor of Science in Forestry, Master of Science, Master of Arts, Master of Arts in Education, and Educational Specialist.

Two-year curricula are offered in the fields of nursing, secretarial studies and technology.

Flagstaff is at the base of the San Francisco Peaks, on the main line of the Santa Fe railroad, on U.S. Highways 66 and 89 and State Highway 79. It is also served by airline and two trans-continental bus lines. The city is situated in the Coconino National Forest at an elevation of 7,000 feet. The elevation, the protection provided by the forest, and the Arizona sunshine give Flagstaff an unsurpassed all-the-year-around climate.
